About The Benbulbin.

The Benbulbin combines architectural impact with technical excellence. Taking cues from the mountain's layered limestone slopes, this design merges solid geometric form with light-filled interiors, creating a living space that feels both grounded and expansive.

Built with Structural Insulated Panels (SIPs), The Benbulbin demonstrates our commitment to high-performance, sustainable construction—engineered to meet modern living standards while echoing the timeless spirit of the Irish landscape.

Our Wild Atlantic Way mountain range, including The Benbulbin, is designed for modern living with minimal maintenance. Each build features black profile cladding, contrasting black-framed windows, and a warm maple-clad entrance—a contemporary aesthetic that harmonises strength and warmth. Durable, energy-efficient, and visually distinctive, The Benbulbin stands as a lasting statement of design integrity.

What Are SIPs?

Structural Insulated Panels (SIPs) are advanced building components composed of a rigid insulating core sandwiched between two sheets of oriented strand board (OSB).

This innovative system delivers exceptional structural strength, airtightness, and thermal performance—key to achieving the comfort and sustainability of The Benbulbin.
